Shradar Defends Radio Comments

SAMANTHA HARVEY

News Editor

Student president/regent candidate Jon Shradar appeared on a morning radio show commenting on the intellect of men who attend UNO and offering beer to students who vote for him in the upcoming election.

"They are all stupid, so they're going to vote for me anyway," Shradar said during the Thursday interview with KEZO-FM 92's Todd and Tyler.

The comment was made after Todd and Tyler asked Shradar, "Are you going to take advantage that most guys who go to UNO are really dumb?"

The morning duo are known for insulting the aptitude of the male population at UNO.

"Guys who go to UNO are stupid," the entertainers said. "We have yet to meet a smart guy who came out of UNO."

Todd and Tyler entertain listeners by poking fun at women, the police, senior citizens and local politicians.

"Their morning show is for entertainment purposes," Shradar said. "It would be different if I was on KFAB or a news station that was a strict news supporting thing, but that was not a news interview. It was an entertainment interview," Shradar added. "You don't laugh during a news interview."

Throughout the interview Todd and Tyler referred to men at UNO as stupid several times.

"That is like a five month skit they have going on Todd and Tyler that UNO students are stupid," Shradar said. "Even though it gives me some name recognition, everything said on that show is for fun."

Shradar is not a stranger to UNO student government or controversy. Last year, he was removed from his position as student president/regent after being arrested at a Maverick football game.

The Z-92 morning show also is not unfamiliar territory for Shradar. "Last year when I was arrested, we had fun with the subject of me getting arrested," Shradar said.

During the morning talk show, Shradar also said he would provide beer to those students who voted for him.

"Everybody who can prove they voted for me gets a free beer," he said.

The free beer comment was set-up by the radio show's program manager Donnie Dodge, Shradar said.

Offering beer for votes could be considered bribery; however Shradar will not be punished.

"As long as he is following the guidelines set forth by the election commission, there is no problem," said Mallory Prucha, chief administrative officer for Student Senate.

"If people are uncomfortable voting for me because I made jokes on a morning show, then I don't want them to vote for me," Shradar said. "I want people that are going to be comfortable enough with themselves that they can laugh at a joke and have a good time."

Homework Hotline Begins 15th Season

JILL STEWART

Staff Writer

The Homework Hotline began its 15th season broadcasting from UNO Television Monday, Sept. 11.

The Hotline, which offers math help to elementary, middle and high school students, airs from 4:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. every Monday and Tuesday.

The Monday segments are produced and filmed at UNO, with the help from student staff and crew. The Tuesday show is broadcasted from the Omaha Public Schools Career Center.

The hotline originated at UNO and expanded to the Career Center, said Producer/Director B.J. Huchtemann.

The Monday show features Deb Bradley from Monroe Middle School and Eric Nelson from Fontenelle Elementary School. The teachers on Tuesday are Heather Harbison from McMillan Magnet Center and Paul Jensen from Burke High School.

Huchtemann said, the teachers "have a lot of fun" and "they make it fun even for adults to watch."

Students are encouraged to call in to the live show with their math questions and the teachers then show them how to work the problem.

Generally, the students who answer the phones are the same age as the callers and they refer the questions to the teachers.

Just this year the show added something new, a program called "Real Life Math", a two to five minute segment within the show, which focuses on how to use math skills in adult life.

For example, the show traveled to Kellogg's Omaha Plant, a sponsor of the show, and demonstrated how to figure the surface area of a cereal box.

"We thought it would be nice to add a little pizzazz to the show,"

Forum Focuses on Getting Computers to Urban Area Children

SANDRA COOPER

Senior Staff Writer

Many children living in urban areas of Omaha do not have access to computers in their homes and are being left behind in this digital age.

Thursday evening, various student organizations affiliated with UNO held a forum to address how to close that gap.

The topic of the forum was "Student Affairs" and many organization representatives attended the meeting. Members from Kay Lincoln Alumni, Delta Sigma Theta Alumni Chapter, UNO Kappa Alpha Psi, Lincoln Alumni chapter- Kappa Alpha Psi, Alpha Kappa Alpha Alumni Chapter, Sigma Lambda Beta, UNO and Creighton University Zeta Phi Beta's organizations were at the event.

Keynote speaker Larry Gilreath, a Creighton graduate, led the roundtable discussion in the Chancellor's Room.

The attendees at this discussion included Skinner Magnet Center Principal Elmer Crumbley, student representatives from UNO, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, Creighton and alumni from both University of Nebraska schools.

Gilreath started the meeting by asking the audience "Where do you see the information technology taking minorities?"

"The digital divide is my passion," Crumbley said. "The number of people who surf the web has doubled, but urban and rural areas are not doubling at the same time."

Gilreath agreed that people who do not have access to computers will not be able to survive the technological advances that are revolutionizing our world.

Lenolia Anderson, president of Alpha Eta fraternity, organized the event. He said children need to be trained at an early age on how to use computers.

"I think we have to start kids in the first grade on computers, because the technology is constantly changing," Anderson said.

Gilreath asked the audience: what can be done to help the underprivileged within the Omaha area gain access to computers in their home?

Many of the audience members suggested raising money, asking corporations to donate unused computers to churches or to children who cannot afford to buy computers.

In addition, many of the students said they were willing to become mentors to children in inner-city schools such as Skinner Magnet Center and also willing to volunteer their time to teach parents and children how to use these computers.

"We need to commit ourselves to adopting a school and we need to get UNO organizations involved by becoming mentors," Jerryce Hawkins of the Zeta Phi Beta sorority said. "We don't necessarily have to donate money, but we can volunteer our time by going to the school and showing them how to use a computer."

Campus Stop Signs: For the Birds?

RACHEL MANCZUK / SAMANTHA HARVEY

Staff Writer / News Editor

Stop Sign with green flags in front of the Student Center.

To stop or not to stop for campus stop signs? Drivers on the main UNO campus are often choosing not to stop, prompting Campus Security to take measures to correct the potentially dangerous problem.

Day-glo green flags have sprouted atop stop signs around campus to increase the signs' visibility.

In addition, signs have been doubled up so "STOP" can be seen from the driver and passenger side of the vehicle, said Paul Kosel, manager of Campus Security.

People not stopping at the stop signs in front of the day care center are of particular concern, said Jim Veiga, manager of grounds and environmental service.

The day care center sits near a four-way stop along University Drive West where it intersects College Plaza and the access to a parking lot.

UNO Day Care Director Dawn Hurlburt said people running stop signs has been a problem for a long time.

"We are concerned for the safety of the children because we do walk across that intersection sometimes," Hurlburt said.

Campus Security is taking steps to help control the problem. Officers will monitor intersections and can issue a $10 moving violation ticket for not stopping at the stop signs, Kosel said.

As of press time, no tickets had been issued for that offense.

Although additional measures are being taken, the bulk of the responsibility remains with drivers.

"People need to remember that UNO is not a vehicle campus, it's a pedestrian campus for students," Veiga said.

HOMEWORK HOTLINE

Huchtemann said.

The program also offers a weekly contest, where students call in to answer a problem. The first caller with the right answer receives a free golf or laser tag coupon from The Tilt Family Entertainment Center, which is also a sponsor of the show.

Another sponsor of the show is ALLTEL. The program is funded by The Knowledge Network of Greater Omaha.

The reason help is only offered in mathematics Huchtemann said, is because math was successful, so they just stuck with it, but that's not to say they won't expand in the future.

Monday's episode "was really great", said Huchtemann. "They [the teachers have a lot of fun."

The show can be seen on KYNE-TV Channel 26 and Cox Channel 12.

Hope and Help for Clinical Depression

LISA LINENBERGER

Staff Writer

Although "clinical depression" is a term that most college students are familiar with, many are left bewildered or uneasy when asked to define it, despite the fact that it affects approximately nine million American adults during any six-month period.

Clem Johnson, a counselor for the UNO Counseling Services, defines it concisely as "needless suffering." She goes on to say that it is a whole-body illness, one which affects the body, mood, thoughts, self-esteem and perception of the world and one's environment.

Depression is becoming more prevalent among college students, Johnson said, due to the fact that college is a high-stress environment, and stress can trigger depression, especially if one is genetically susceptible to the illness. It can also be brought on by other events, such as chronic illness, a sudden loss, or a break-up, yet sometimes it occurs for seemingly no reason at all.

The symptoms are abundant; persistent feelings of sadness, hopelessness, emptiness, pessimism, guilt and worthlessness are common, as is a loss of interest in activities that once brought pleasure, like hobbies and sex.

Thoughts of suicide may also occur. Physical symptoms usually accompany the emotional ones; for example, insomnia, oversleeping, or continuous fatigue sometimes signify depression, as do significant increases or decreases in appetite. In one particular form of the illness, manic depression, periods of depression are interspersed with times of inappropriate elation, extreme irritability, grandiose notions, disconnected or racing thoughts and poor judgment.

One reason that depression often goes untreated is the negative stigma attached to it.

"Clinical depression is a serious illness, certainly if not treated," Johnson said. "A lack of knowledge is the real problem in addressing depression. Some see it as something a person should be able to control, but it is an illness, a serious one, and it should not be taken lightly. Depression has a dramatic effect on a person's life; it determines whether or not a person enjoys life, and, at worst, it leads to suicide."

According to Johnson and Pam Feldman, a licensed professional counselor in the Omaha area, the first step in dealing with depression is to see a professional and get a diagnosis. Depending on the evaluation, medicine and/or psychotherapy usually follows.

"It's a very treatable illness," Johnson said. "That's not to say there's always recovery, but with new medicines, a good many people are able to overcome the depression, or, if it's inherited, improve their condition and lead productive lives."

Not everyone who is diagnosed with the illness needs anti-depressant drugs, but for those who do take them, the drugs produce neurochemical reactions in the body, adjusting levels of the chemicals serotonin, dopamine and in the case of manic depression, lithium.

Getting Help

There are many places around Omaha, and around campus, where people going through depression can go for help.

UNO Counseling Services, located in room 115 of the Eppley Administration Building, schedules free appointments for interested students. There students can talk with a counselor who will make an assessment and provide advice. Unless someone is a danger to himself or others, in which case a counselor is bound by law to seek additional assistance, anonymity is guaranteed.

If someone sees signs of clinical depression in himself, symptoms that have exceeded a normal period of time or have gotten progressively worse, Johnson says that it is a good idea to visit the counseling center.

"The expectation is that feeling depressed is a temporary condition, not a permanent one," Johnson said.

If additional counseling is needed, students can see UNO counselors regularly; this service is free, and the counseling department works with psychiatrists and hospitals in the city if such services are required.

UNO is not the only place to find help.

"It is important for people to know that resources are available," Feldman said.

A person can ask his doctor about depression, look under "counselors" in the yellow pages for a complete listing of counselors in the area or even speak with a UNO counselor to find someone who practices in the area and charges on a sliding scale, based on income.

She also said that a lot of students have mental health coverage through their parents, and they may not know that, in which case they should ask their insurance company which providers are covered under their particular policy.

Both counselors agree that taking action is extremely important if one suspects he or she has depression.

"Taking care of your mental health can affect all the facets of your life," Feldman said. "It is crucial for anyone who feels abnormally depressed to seek help, for there is hope."

Living with Clinical Depression

Column by Becky Swett

If happiness really is determined by one's outlook on life, then having clinical depression is like having cataracts.

Although depression is a medical condition that deals mainly with brain chemicals such as serotonin and dopamine, society has attached a lot of negative stigma to it.

"Why can't people just try to look on the bright side?" they ask.

Everyone has problems. Everybody has to deal with things. And that's true. It's been said that most Americans at some point in their lives will have to deal with a very depressing period, whether it's due to the loss of a job or loved one, a stressful or traumatic situation or something else. But sometimes a dose of "Chicken Soup for the Soul" just isn't enough.

Even though situations like those are hard to deal with, they don't last forever. Most people go through the steps of the grieving process (however slowly) and get on with their lives, even though nothing will ever be quite the same again.

Being clinically depressed feels somewhat like the grieving process, except the overwhelming feelings of sadness, hopelessness, and apathy never go away. Instead of waking up and thinking about all that you need to do, you wake up wishing you didn't have to go through another day. Instead of picking up the phone and calling your best friend, you close yourself off and when your friends do call, you're torn between telling them how you really feel and not caring whether or not they know.

It's like living with a monster inside your head, and the monster squashes all the good thoughts you have and the happy things you feel. When someone tells you that they like your hair, the monster steps on that compliment and vomits something else into your brain, like, "Oh, it looks really bad today. I couldn't get it to go the way I wanted it." And since the monster squashes all the good thoughts, all that's left is negativity. He feeds off of it, licks up every drop of it and it makes him grow. Soon he's so big it overwhelms your mind, and you don't know how to get rid of him.

Many people who are depressed think about suicide. They feel it to be their only escape, the only way that they can stop the endless cycle of feeling only pain.

Nearly everyone says, "How can anyone be that selfish?" True, suicide is somewhat of a selfish thing. But what I think these people don't realize is that people who are suicidal don't want to kill themselves to "get back" at someone or to make everyone else's lives miserable. When they write "I love you" in a suicide note, they really do mean it.

The issue isn't that "if she really loved me she wouldn't have even tried it," the issue is that a suicidal person is feeling a lot of pain, and these feelings of pain are so overwhelming that they block out other feelings like love and happiness. And that hurts even more, to know that you love someone and still feel so desperate to end your own pain, knowing that either way they're going to be hurt too.

Some people think that those with clinical depression enjoy being down all the time. Obviously, these people have not had to live with it. Nobody likes feeling pain. Nobody likes the constant heavy feeling in their stomach. Nobody enjoys having no energy, self-esteem or motivation. Nobody likes wanting to die. It goes against the basic human survival instincts.

Even after therapy and antidepressant medication, depression is still a day-to-day struggle for a lot of people. And while it feels like it's completely overtaking your life, it doesn't have to. If you think you may have depression, talk to your doctor about it. It's a medical condition that can be treated. If you're extremely depressed and thinking about killing yourself, pick up the phone and talk to someone. Trying to commit suicide really isn't worth it.

Believe me. I'm speaking from experience here.

Mechanically Inclined?

Kathy's Korner

Most women today can change a tire, change their oil and pump their own gas, but then, I'm not most women.

I was fortunate enough to receive a generous gift from my church — a car. Granted, it's a little older than the typical car, but it's more than I had to start with. And the sad part is it runs better than the one I paid $10,000 for four years ago. (Well, technically

I didn't pay that much for it. I decided it wasn't worth $1,000 let alone $10,000, and so I let them take it back, but that's another story.)

Anyway, I was really excited about my "new" car. I didn't plan on driving anywhere special, but just the idea of having the ability to go somewhere if I wanted to was pretty awesome in my eyes.

Within the first few days of getting my "new" car, I put several miles on it. I was nervous about driving it very far, but then, the car I mentioned earlier had a habit of breaking down every few miles. (But, as I mentioned earlier, that's another story.)

Due to my nervousness, I decided to have a friend come over and look at it. "Jerry," a good friend of mine, came over to my house. He was pretty ill that day, but he wanted to make sure that I did indeed receive a car that would keep me safe. (And hopefully allow you to remain safe!)

He asked if I'd checked the oil. No, I hadn't. I didn't even know where it was. Of course, I knew the oil needed to be checked, but I figured it could wait.

Well, I was three quarts low. I'm not sure what that means, but I don't think it's good.

The next thing he wanted to know was if I had put any water in the car. Water? I have to put water in a car? Isn't gas enough?

So, "Jerry" kindly showed me where to add the water. Like I'm going to remember? I think we added close to two quarts of water, but I could be wrong, it might have been three.

The next important thing according to "Jerry" was to take the car for a test drive. So we spent the next twenty minutes riding around in the car.

In spite of myself, I hadn't done any serious damage.

Before he left, "Jerry" did ask me if I had any questions. As embarrassed as I am to admit it, I had to ask where the button to turn my headlights on was located. Please keep in mind, I am used to them being attached to the steering wheel by that long stick thingy. You know, the thingy you use to tell other drivers you want to signal. I'm talking about the turning signal, for you folks out there who are thinking of signals such as the middle finger.

He showed me that my headlight thing was on my dashboard. That was cool with me.

Since I was all set to go, I bade "Jerry" good-bye.

Even though I had the car, I didn't drive it to school very often and I still don't. Traffic hassles give me a headache and there's enough road rage on the road already, thank you very much. However, there was a morning this week when I decided to drive to Crossroads and park.

It was dark and early in the morning, so I turned on my lights. For some odd reason, I was unable to see very well. So, I put my lights on what I thought was "brights." I was totally unaware that I had a setting for parking lights, which as it turned out, I was using that particular morning. In fact, I am quite ashamed to say, that I just found that out today.

I took my car to a service station to find out why my "regular" lights didn't work. Come to find out, they work just fine. The service man, Steve, was very kind and didn't laugh at me. At least, not to my face. He also showed me how to dim my dash lights and how to turn on my brights.

For those of you who believe that I am exaggerating, please keep in mind, that while I was in high school women took cooking and sewing.

A couple of women did take auto mechanics, but I wasn't one of them. There are some very capable women out there that can give some men a run for their money as far as mechanics goes, but I'm just not one of them.

Neither are my two brothers Steven or Pat, but then, that's another story too.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Erin Joy's commentary on liberalism (Sept. 8) was typical — a state of confusion. The only candidate trying to scare people is algore (I didn't misspell it) targeting the poor and elderly with such issues as perscription drugs and social security saying "Bush and Cheyney are trying to take them away, join us or die." As far as the military is concerned true liberals have always loathed it. Patriotism has been replaced in their vocabulary by a false sense of "world peace" and an over reliance upon the United Nations (which is of course only a front for big government.) To the host of liberals at UNO I ask you this question, "Will countries like Iraq, North Korea, and China who have made suggestions that they can or soon will be able to target American cities with nuclear weapons be any less threatening because we have no nuclear defensive system?" I think not! George W. Bush does not support "reopening more bases overseas to house missiles again" that is simply not true. What Bush supports is protecting America with a missile defensive system and strengthening the moral of the military with a commander in chief they can respect. So when called upon all the brave men and women of the armed services will be able to proudly and confidently report to their President "ready for duty, sir."

Cruisin' the News

• I Feel Flushed

Mr. Peckham, headmaster of Bramhall High School, near Stockport, England, has installed uni-sex toilets in his school in an attempt to cut down on student vandalism and smoking. One parent was worried this will be an "open invitation for hanky panky."

Hanky panky? That's nothing compared to the riots which are sure to occur when the Bramhall girls discover boys really DON'T put the toilet seats down.

• Muscle Head

Doctors at the Oxford Dementia Center in England are having remarkable success using vigorous exercise to help stimulate damaged brain centers. One 86-year-old man suffering from dementia began speaking fluent Italian (which he had learned during WWII) after going through a regimen of rock climbing, swimming and swinging down military "zip" wires. Another patient began writing classical music after his workouts.

Friends of Bobby Knight have just booked him a ticket to London.

• So, That's Why I Never Got A Date

Mark Shevlin, a researcher at Magee

College at the University of Ulster, has just released the results of his experiment. According to Shevlin, women can subconsciously tell if a man is either a good candidate for a mate or a complete jerk, simply by glancing at the man's face. His team does not know, however, precisely what facial features trigger the subconscious response.

One more reason George W. Bush is falling in the polls.

• Kiddie Corps?

The Italian Armed Forces disclosed Sept. 8 it found enough clothes stored in army warehouses to outfit its military for the next 3,000 years. One problem exists: some of the uniforms are in children's sizes (3,862 small blue shirts and 8,111 pairs of tiny woolen gloves).

I have one question for the guy who bought all this unnecessary stuff — how did the Pentagon let you go?

• Fly Me To The Mesosphere

New Scientist magazine reports a new toy (for the person who has everything) due out within three years. It is the "Kitten," a 20-foot rocket which will take you and two of your friends just short of orbit at four times the speed of sound and bring you gliding back to earth. Cost is $500,000, and you have to put it together yourself.

Insurance, FAA clearance, NASA engineers, computer systems, dopler weather radar, launching pad, land for launching pad, permission from your neighbors to use backyard for launching pad, permission from your neighbors to use their pool as splash-down site and batteries not included.

• Parfum 'd Tuna

Chef Bernard Loiseau and B'Prime Company of Paris are planning to bottle kitchen aromas and sell them as perfumes. They are also planning to market scented candles and potpourris in everything from "chicken breast with warm foie gras" to "chocolate dessert with bitter orange peel" to something called "scented frog cup." The product line will hit the stores beginning in January.

Presumably, their pepper and cinnamon cologne will not be called "Old Spices."

Garrison Keillor in Concert

a review by David M. Johnson

Minnesota is an enigma wrapped inside a puzzle.

On the one hand you have Gov. Jesse Ventura, a cartoon character who dresses in black leather business suits, Nike cross trainers and a boa, elected to office by thousands of Lutherans who obviously had overdosed on tuna noodle casserole and lime Jello topped with Cool Whip.

On the other hand you have Garrison Keillor, an over-sized, middle-aged humorist who dresses in ill-fitting suits, red bow tie (socks to match) and sings with a voice which reminds you a of a cross between your old, semi-retired pastor and Kermit the Frog.

Fortunately for us, it was Keillor who came to town over the weekend for three glorious concerts at the Orpheum under the direction of Philip Brunelle and the Omaha Symphony Orchestra.

For those of you not familiar with Garrison Keillor, he is the author of a number of books, the most famous being "Lake Wobegon Days," as well as creator of the public radio show, "A Prairie Home Companion."

Keillor's appeal is that of a favorite uncle who has come to dinner with a pocketful of marvelous stories to tell. His stories are our stories. They are our lives. He speaks in a guilt-free, self-deprecating tone, making fun of his Lutheran religion, his Scandinavian background and his Midwestern roots.

He even gave us the opportunity to laugh at ourselves.

"When I was a child, my grandmother used Omaha as a threat," Keillor said. "She told me if I was bad, she was going to send me to relatives in Nebraska where they would work me really hard."

As the laughter grew, Keillor continued, "The people of Minneapolis love Omaha. Omaha makes them feel more cultured than they have a right to be."

The two-hour concert was a treat from home with songs about Chevys, old dogs, lawn sprinklers and feeding garlic to the baby so you could find him in the dark. "We Wake Up To Snow On The Ground" was a song near to all our hearts here in the Heartland. Lyrical choruses included, "We're happier when we're in pain," and (referring to those oh-so-cold winter mornings) "Don't worry neighbor, we'll come out and give you a start."

Keillor mixed Americana with religion throughout his performance. He parlayed "Momma's Little Baby Loves Shortenin' Bread" with "Nearer My God To Thee." He moved from "A Boy's Best Friend Is His Mother" to a very bluesy "Yes, Jesus Loves Me," accompanied by piccolo.

In "The Young Lutheran's Guide to the Orchestra," Keillor explained why so many Lutheran kids shy away from music. "The reason Lutherans don't play the French horn is because it is a very difficult instrument to play, and it is easy to play a bad note. Playing a bad note on a French horn is like breaking wind at your mother's funeral. After you do, you think of nothing else."

Of the oboe he said, "the oboe is a very sensuous instrument. When you hear the oboe in the movies, it's probably a movie a Lutheran boy shouldn't be at."

The highlight of the evening, of course, was the traditional "news from Lake Wobegon." It was a 30-minute gem, a tale of the time his female cousin was caught at school not wearing a bra under her sweater and the shame it brought to the family.

Keillor reminds us of what main street America is all about. It is little wonder his three-day show broke the SuperPops Series attendance record.

"magnolia" (available now on DVD and VHS)

"magnolia" should have swept the Oscars. It should have won Best Picture. Paul Thomas Anderson should have won both Best Direction and Best Original Screenplay. Robert Elswit should have won Best Cinematography. Any one of the more than half-dozen male roles should have won Best Supporting Actor. The same goes with Melora Walters and Julianne Moore for Best Supporting Actress. Okay, so even if roles in "magnolia" had won both supporting awards, it wouldn't technically be a sweep. You still get the point. "magnolia" is a damn fine movie, arguably the best of last year and surely one of the best films of the last decade.

Unfortunately, not nearly as many people saw "magnolia" as should have. But just about anyone who has seen the film claims to have been emotionally moved and touched to at least some degree. The small number of those who have seen the movie and are indifferent to it, well, they're just emotionally detached or something else not good.

The only two complaints commonly voiced about "magnolia" are its length (around three hours) and its purported oversized cast. What a bunch of nitpickers.

Under the helm of any other young filmmaker, "magnolia" would probably have turned into a three-hour session of masturbation and pretension. However, as the singular vision of director/writer Paul Thomas Anderson, "magnolia" is the most personal and human film in years.

Of course, there really is no conventional plot in "magnolia." Despite this, the film moves along at perfect pace. In fact, it is one of those rarities where the three-hour movie seems like a 90-minute movie.

If you really must know the story, it is somewhat simple. The lives of several different San Fernando Valley residents intertwine on a single, fateful day. That's basically a paraphrase of the back of the box, and it's all you really need to know about the plot.

What you should know is just how superb "magnolia" is, perfectly portraying the aforementioned lives. Sadness and despair haunt each character in one manner or another. Just how this anguish manifests itself and what the characters do to overcome it, if anything, is what provides the crux of the story in "magnolia."

There are absolutely no missteps in "magnolia." Each actor portrays his or her respective character perfectly. Anderson never allows the characters to become either too pathetic or too admirable, and that is just why each one becomes so endearing by the film's conclusion. Not one line is extraneous, not one scene too short or too drawn out.

"magnolia" defies description or comment for the most part. If you have not seen this movie, take the opportunity to see it now. And keep in mind that "magnolia" is not film as entertainment. It is film as art, in that it taps into your emotions and perhaps even leaves you contemplating the deeper meaning of your own life.

Mavs Ground Game Grinds Up Minnesota State as Wright Becomes All-Time Rushing Leader

CORY CARLSON

Staff Writer

UNO used a 206-yard performance by senior tailback Adam Wright to run over the Minnesota State Mavericks on Saturday, 31-10. Wright (2,949 career yards) eclipsed former quarterback Ed Thompson's career rushing mark of 2,894 yards.

Wright wasted little time at the onset, racing 80 yards to pay dirt on the first play from scrimmage. He added another touchdown on a 13-yard run to give UNO a 14-0 first-quarter lead.

Wright, averaging 6.5 yards per tote this season, crossed the goal line three times on the afternoon to raise his season total to six touchdowns.

UNO called only one pass play in the first half as the big boys up front took control early. UNO had over 400 yards of total offense and averaged 6.8 yards per play in the contest, much improved over weeks one and two.

Redshirt freshman Trey Guidry, in only his second collegiate start, kept mistakes to a minimum, and led the Mavs on scoring drives of 69, 67, and 13 yards.

"He has those intangibles you look for in a quarterback, like leadership," Offensive Coordinator Lance Liepold said. "He'll keep getting better each week."

The UNO defenders were no slouches in their performance Saturday either, holding MSU to 59 yards rushing and 153 total yards for the game. Highly-touted running back T.J. Schraufnagel (MSU's leading rusher a year ago, 1,241 yds., 15 TD's) had to work hard for his 88 yards on 23 carries.

"The more they spread us out, the more we heated it up," Liepold said in reference to UNO's defensive pressure on quarterback Ryan Dutton. The Mav defense sacked MSU quarterbacks four times, and intercepted two passes.

UNO began to put the game away in the fourth quarter when junior defensive back Tyree Kellogg picked off Dutton and raced 75 yards the other way for the score. That put UNO up 24-10.

On MSU's next possession, Demond Finister stepped in front of a pass from quarterback Andrew McKay and brought it back to the MSU 13-yard line. That set up Wright's third touchdown of the day, a three-yard plunge to cap the scoring.

UNO's defense was led by Abrian Stovall, who recorded 11 total tackles, including two sacks. Senior middle linebacker Ryan Hoffman also contributed to a strong effort with nine tackles, including three for losses.

UNO improved to 2-1 overall with the win, 1-0 in NCC conference play. Minnesota State fell to 0-3, 0-1 in the NCC.

No. 19 UNO travels to Sioux City next Saturday to face the Morningside Mustangs at Roberts Stadium. Northern Colorado blanked the Mustangs 21-0 on Saturday.

Coyote Ugly: Volleyball Remains Undefeated After NCC Matchups

MELISSA KUCIREK

Senior Staff Writer

A surprising start from the University of South Dakota Coyotes didn't last, and by the fourth set it got ugly.

The Coyotes began by howling for joy. Maybe it was due to edging Division II No. 3 UNO in game one, or maybe it was because Maverick hockey players (with pink dyed hair) were parading around the Sapp Fieldhouse, rolling around in trash cans and somersaulting in their skivvies.

UNO's 11-15, 15-9, 15-8, 15-1 win gave the Mavericks a 13-0 record, 2-0 in the North Central Conference. The Mavericks had previously won Friday's face-off against Morningside College, 15-13, 15-7, 15-5.

UNO faced a Coyote team which finished 0-18 in 1999 conference play, but came to Sapp Fieldhouse with a 6-8 overall record for the 2000 season. USD led early in the game, and kept to UNO's heels before taking the first set.

"We came expecting to win," freshman setter Kylie Lebeda said. "We didn't have respect for our opponents, more or less."

Lebeda mentioned that UNO's game-plan execution did not live up to expectations.

"We didn't run (the plays) like we should have," Lebeda said.

Head Coach Rose Shires noted USD's size in the middle of the court. At 6-3, Nicole Johnson hit 261 and had five assisted blocks.

"They out-sized us by five inches," Shires said. "We wanted to use our middles as decoys."

The Mavericks' leadership and experience won out in the end. Senior Bethany Tygart continued to share playing time with Lebeda, playing back row. Tygart compiled 20 assists, while Lebeda racked up 33.

Tygart also sparked the Mavs with her aggressive serving.

"BT (Tygart) is one of the best servers we've ever had in our program," Shires said.

UNO attackers led both teams with 65 total kills. Junior All-American Nikki Mastny pounded 17 kills. Senior All-American Tracy Ankeny notched 14, and senior Krista Niezwaag took 13. Sophomore Jewella Grennan joined in with 10 kills.

"I thought Nikki had a great net match tonight," Shires said. "I also thought Krista and Jewella had a great match."

By the fourth game it became evident UNO was the better team. The Mavs hit .379 for the match and kept Coyote attackers to a .077 percentage.

"We finally played with heart that last match," Lebeda said.

USD Head Coach Darin Weber felt his team didn't fail because of lack of conditioning.

"If we keep getting looked at like we're the same old USD, we will end up winning matches," Weber said. "We're in great shape, it has everything to do with the fact they're the third-ranked team in the country and we're the worst team in the conference. That's what good teams do, plain and simple. We were overwhelmed."

In Friday's match, the Mavericks played against Morningside College. Ankeny and Mastny took charge getting 12 and 11 kills respectively. Tygart, who started the first match, edged Lebeda in assists with 23 to Lebeda's 17.

UNO won in three, 15-13, 15-7, 15-5.

"I don't even notice (there is a change of setters)," Grennan said. "They both did great."

"Right now Kylie is higher on the block," Shires said. "It's a very good opportunity for me to use both setters and both of their strengths."

In the first game, Shires took a time-out at 12-13, and set up a play for Krista Niezwaag. Her dump shot into the doughnut of the floor keyed a Mav run.

"We were really working on setting up blocks to take away their key shots," Morningside Head Coach Theresa Kathman-Trees said.

At one point, Niezwaag made an outstanding dig, nearly cartwheeling in her efforts.

"Krista's athleticism really showed," Shires said. "It was very good hustle, the hitter was definitely showing that she was going to one side of court and Krista made that read. The hitter just pushed it to the other corner and Krista made a great effort to get that ball and give us a opportunity. That's the type of defense I feel our team is about on a consistent basis."

Maverick walls took a total of 5.5 team blocks, holding off Mustang hitters to a .031 hitting percentage in game three.

Morningside was charged with several net violations from aggressive blocking, and UNO's eye-lash-length-from-the-net-serves nearly cost pivotal sideouts. Tygart was the first and last server for the night, finally taking the Mav win in the fifth game point-serve.

"We're really trying to focus on our serving, it's going to one of the big differences in us being a top-five team," Shires said. "Bethany creates points for us as a server. I tell you what, when it's rally scoring, I want Bethany serving."

Senior Tracy Ankeny uses finesse to guide the ball over the net against the Morningside Mustangs Friday night.

Cross Country Captures Second

BRIAN BRASHAW

Staff Writer

The UNO women's cross country team continued its top-three ways, finishing second at the Woody Greeno Invitational in Lincoln Saturday. With the second-place finish, UNO has now taken top-three honors in their last nine meets.

UNO took home third at last week's meet, which the Mavericks co-hosted with Creighton.

This weekend, Nebraska-Wesleyan hosted the women's meet while the University of Nebraska-Lincoln hosted the men's.

The Mavericks finished 51 points behind Central Missouri, who claimed the Woody Greeno women's title.

Despite having only one runner finish in the top 10, UNO put together enough low times to take the silver prize in the 5000-meter run.

Natalie Malone crossed the tape in tenth place with a time of 19:06. Darcy Preston, fully recovered from a medical problem, finished right behind her in 11th with a 19:08 mark.

Preston collapsed with just about 50 meters to go in last week's race at Seymour Smith Park. She was given medical attention and restored herself to running condition in time for this weekend's event.

Other Maverick finishers included Sara Stricker (26th with a time of 19:46), Michelle Ellington (27th with a 19:49 mark) and Becky Boltz (55th with a time of 20:25).

Golfers Drive into Third Place

DAVID M JOHNSON

Sports Editor

Head Coach Melissa Odell's UNO women's golf team returned from the South Dakota State Invitational Sunday clutching the bronze. Ten shots behind runner-up Minnesota State-Mankato, and a dozen behind winner Southwest State, the Mavericks celebrated its best finish of the inaugural season.

UNO's Stephanie Oster finished the tourney with a two-day total of 162, a mere three strokes behind individual titlest Kasey Aanenson of Minnesota State. Mav Kristin Stephenson shot her way to a seventh-place 167, while teammate Joey Simet's 169 was good for eighth best.

Other UNO results were Sandy Strate, who finished 16th with a 172 and Katie Etter, who came in 40th with a 182.

Eleven teams participated in the two-round event held at the Brookings Country Club in Brookings, S.D.

STATMAN

• Ankeny Annihilation Watch: Following this weekend's action, senior attacker Tracy Ankeny is No. 2 on the UNO all-time kills list with 1,631. Next up is No. 1 Kathy Knudsen with 1,645. She is No. 1 in career total attacks with 3,719, and No. 6 on the all-time digs list with 1,415. Next up here is No. 5 Tanya Cate with 1,438.

• Tygart Target Watch: Following this weekend's action, senior setter Bethany Tygart stands at No. 5 on the all-time UNO set assist list with 2,609. Next up is No. 4 Darla Melcher with 2,628.

• Krista's Kount: Following this weekend's action, senior Krista Nlezwaag finds herself No. 9 on the school's all-time block assists list with 292. Next up is No. 8 Denise Otten with 294.

• UNO's football victory at Minnesota State-Mankato stopped a run of five consecutive road losses.

• Adam Wright's 206-yards rushing Saturday against MSU marks only the ninth time a Mav running back cracked the double-century. LaRon Henderson's 233 yards rushing against South Dakota State in 1990 is still the UNO single-game record. Wright's best performance was 217 yards against South Dakota State last year. He is the only Mav in school history with two 200-yard rushing games.

• Tyree Kellogg's 75-yard interception return for TD was remarkable, but is not the longest in UNO history. Gerald Allen returned one 94 yards in 1962 against Washburn.

Maverick Soccer Plays Ungracious Host

BRIAN BRASHAW
Staff Writer

Gracious hosts?

The Maverick women's soccer team never has been. UNO kept that reputation going, treating guests Truman State to a 2-0 loss, and serving up a 5-0 defeat over Central Missouri this weekend at the Ramada Inn Classic held at Aksarben.

Nebraska-Omaha improved its overall record to 6-2 by shutting out both opponents.

All four teams playing in the Ramada Inn Classic this weekend, (UNO, Truman State, Central Missouri, and Northern Colorado) are among the Division II Central Region top ten. UNO played Truman State Saturday, and Central Missouri on Sunday.

Things didn't start off all roses for UNO. Despite carrying the play, the Mavericks had a tough time scoring on Truman State's strong defense. Eventually, the Maverick offense found the net.

The Nebraska-Omaha attack came from somewhat of a surprise source. Defenseman Tai Zuckweiler scored her first college career goal in the 81st minute of the game to give UNO a 1-0 lead. Akeisha Varnado, coming off stress fracture injuries, sent a cross to Zuckweiler who leaped and battled for the header and the goal.

UNO got an insurance goal at the 83rd-minute mark when Jessica Dodson beat Truman State goalie Emily Huyck up top.

Again, UNO out-shot its opponent, 20-4. Mav goalie Michelle Villanueva had to make only one save to ensure the shutout.

This was the second match between UNO and Truman. UNO won last September, 2-1.

Up next was a Central Missouri team which UNO handled 2-0 last season. Again, the Mavs would shut out UCM.

The Mavericks continued the home defensive stinginess. Head Coach Don Klosterman's team scored more goals than Central Missouri had shots on goal, earning a 5-0 victory.

The UNO defense allowed Villanueva to be tested with only three shots, all pushed aside. As a team, UNO gave up no corner kicks, and committed less fouls than Central Missouri.

The Mavericks had their most productive half of the season against Central Missouri with four first-half goals. North Central Conference player of the year in 1999, Katie Hobbs got Nebraska-Omaha on the board early. Just 16:28 into the game, Hobbs scored what would end up being the game-winner. She was assisted by Dani Plumb, and Varnado.

Less than five minutes later, UNO scored again on a Stephanie Kruse goal. Less than a minute after that, UNO continued its assault when Varnado got her first goal since coming back from the injury.

Tai Zuckweiler finished off the game with a goal in the 34th minute, and another in the second half, her third of the weekend.

UNO finished 2-0 with seven goals for the Ramada

Inn Classic, and allowed just four shots on goal.

Zuckweiler led the Mavericks with three goals for six points. Varnado had a goal and three assists, and Hobbs had a goal and two assists in the two games.

The Mavericks will open conference play on the road at St. Cloud State next weekend.

Re-Wrighting History

CORY CARLSON

Staff Writer

Senior tailback Adam Wright became the all-time leading career rusher at UNO Saturday, thanks to a 206-yard performance against Minnesota State. His 2,949 yards rushing make him No. 1 in Mav history. It may have been the quietest gridiron record ever broken.

Wright is a 6-1, 230 lb. specimen who trimmed his body fat down to just 3.5 percent at the start of the 2000 campaign. He runs the 40 in 4.75, and has exceptional strength and balance.

"There's no question we're excited about Adam," Head Coach Pat Behrns said. "He's done tremendous things to himself physically, and will undoubtedly have to carry more of the load (in 2000). Adam knows he's the go-to guy," Behrns said.

A quarterback for Head Coach Herman Colvin at Omaha North High School, Wright was an honorable-mention All-State pick in 1995, and also lettered in basketball.

Wright turned down scholarship offers from Wyoming, Indiana State, and Montana State to stay close to home. More importantly, Wright considers himself to be a team player who came to UNO, "... to be a part of turning a program around."

Following a redshirt season, Wright was second on the team in 1997 in rushing, behind quarterback Ed Thompson. He finished with 748 yards and four scores.

Wright improved steadily in 1998 with seven touchdowns on 741 yards gained. He put together three 100-yard games.

Last season was truly a breakout year for Wright, eclipsing the 1000-yard plateau for the first time, while scoring 13 touchdowns.

Wright has been so steady, he has almost become a foregone conclusion, taken for granted as the top guy in an improving offense.

"Adam Wright is obviously the mainstay, the guy who gets the ball 20-25 times a ball game," Behrns said.

Off the gridiron, Wright has found time to run alongside Will Marunda for Student Regent Vice-President. Beyond football, Wright has aspirations as a civil engineer.

Wright, who shattered the all-time career rushing mark in just three years plus three games this year, credits his lineman for his achievement.

"I owe a lot of offensive lineman, going back to the Bob Wegners and Chris Bobers, all those guys," said Wright.
